The fur trade was a major part of the history of Quebec, and the families who participated in it played a significant role in the development of the province. This book tells the story of one such family, the Lamoureux-Pigarouche family. Pierre Lamoureux and Marguerite Pigarouche were two of the most prominent fur traders in Quebec, and their family was one of the most successful.

This book is the first in a series that will tell the stories of the fur trade families of Quebec. It is based on extensive research in original sources, and it provides a wealth of information about the Lamoureux-Pigarouche family and their role in the fur trade.

Arrival in New France

Pierre Lamoureux was born in France in 1640. He came to New France in 1663, and he quickly became involved in the fur trade. He married Marguerite Pigarouche, a Wendat woman, in 1665. The couple had 12 children, and their descendants played a major role in the fur trade for generations to come.

The fur trade was a dangerous and difficult business. The traders had to travel long distances through treacherous terrain, and they were often at risk of attack by Native Americans. However, the rewards could be great. The fur trade made the Lamoureux-Pigarouche family one of the wealthiest in Quebec.

Legacy of the Lamoureux-Pigarouche Family

The Lamoureux-Pigarouche family left a lasting legacy in Quebec. Their descendants continued to play a role in the fur trade for generations, and they also made significant contributions to the development of the province. One of their descendants, Louis-Joseph Papineau, was a leading figure in the Rebellions of 1837-1838.

The Lamoureux-Pigarouche family is a reminder of the important role that fur trade families played in the history of Quebec. This book tells their story in a fascinating and engaging way, and it is a must-read for anyone interested in the history of Quebec or the fur trade.
