The book "How the Battle Between Trump and Xi Threatens a New Cold War" examines the factors that have led to the current state of affairs between the United States and China, and explores the potential consequences of a new Cold War.

The book is written by John Mearsheimer, a professor of political science at the University of Chicago. Mearsheimer is a leading expert on international relations, and his book has been praised for its clear and concise analysis of the current situation between the United States and China.

In the book, Mearsheimer argues that the United States and China are on a collision course, and that a new Cold War is all but inevitable.

He argues that the United States is a declining power, while China is a rising power. As China's power grows, the United States will become increasingly threatened by China's challenge to its global dominance.

Mearsheimer also argues that the Trump administration's policies have accelerated the decline of the United States and have made a new Cold War more likely.

He argues that Trump's trade war with China has damaged the U.S. economy and has alienated allies. Trump's withdrawal from the Trans-Pacific Partnership and the Paris Agreement on climate change has also weakened the United States' global leadership.

Mearsheimer concludes the book by arguing that the United States and China need to find a way to coexist peacefully. He argues that the United States needs to accept China's rise to power, and that China needs to respect the United States' global leadership.

Mearsheimer's book is a timely and important contribution to the debate over the future of the relationship between the United States and China. It is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the current state of affairs between the two superpowers and the potential consequences of a new Cold War.
