One fateful day, as Obinna basked in the warm sunlight, Uche darted past, snatching a piece of fish from the cat's paws. Angered by the rat's audacious theft, Obinna vowed revenge.

From that day forward, Obinna tirelessly pursued Uche, determined to reclaim his stolen delicacy. Uche, in turn, outwitted the feline at every turn, using his agility and knowledge of the village's hidden nooks and crannies.

The Origin of the Chase

As the chase continued, Obinna's frustration grew. Desperate for an advantage, he sought the wisdom of the village elder, a renowned storyteller. The elder listened intently to Obinna's tale and smiled knowingly.

"Long ago," the elder explained, "the cats and rats were once the best of friends. They shared their food and played together in harmony. However, one fateful day, a terrible famine struck the village."

The elder continued, "In the midst of the scarcity, Uche stumbled upon a hidden store of grain. Eager to share his good fortune with his friend, he raced to Obinna's home. Unfortunately, Obinna, driven by hunger and desperation, had他已经 come to believe that Uche was hoarding the food for himself."

"Enraged by this misunderstanding, Obinna accused Uche of stealing. A fierce quarrel ensued, and the once-unbreakable bond between them was shattered. From that day forward, cats have chased rats, forever seeking retribution for the perceived betrayal."
